

For frequent air travelers like myself, flying has become increasingly stressful. I can think of few things that will generate more stress (and anger) than the annoyance of being trapped with a plane full of people using cellular telephones. Most aircraft are equipped with the "airphone" device if one needs to make a phone call. I sincerely believe that the approval of this rule will likely increase the incidents of "air rage" that have become all too common. "Can you hear me now?"

Thank you for your consideration